FOREIGN TRADE FOR GERMANY AFTER WAR

That Germany is preparing to re-enter the merchant marine field at the close of the European war is the substance of an address made by Albert Ballin, war minister of the German railroads and director of the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, at a general meeting of the Woermann Shipping Company recently in which he declared that the war was the "greatest, bloodiest and most idiotic war of all time."

Herr Ballin declared that German shipping interests, after the successful termination of this war, must be prepared to conduct a new war on the economic battleground against competitors "extraordinarily strengthened by war profits of fantastic height." He expressed confidence, however, that the old Hanseatic spirit would be able to accept successfully the gage of battle in this struggle. First, however, he declared that the concept of freedom must be so established that Germans, in regard to the world trade, need no longer be forced to live as "tenants of England."

In conclusion Herr Ballin thanked the Reichstag for the resolutions passed by it recognizing the importance of a speedy rebuilding of Germany's mercantile marine and requesting the assistance of the government to that end.

The meeting, which sanctioned the reorganization of the Woermann Line, signified the advent as a shipping magnate of Hugo Stinnes, one of Germany's great coal and iron men, who was elected a director of the company. August Thyssen, another and perhaps the greatest of Germany's iron and coal magnates, has bought a fourth interest in the Vulkan ship works at Bremen. Thyssen and Stinnes are credited with the belief that Germany's future lies upon the water and that the expected post-bellum boom will bring great returns to the men who are first on the ground.

A Beloit man went to Kansas City recently on pleasure bent, and left Friend Wife at home, saying the Call, which goes on to say: Shortly after his return he and his wife were invited to a party. The wife laid out her husband's overcoat, and lest she should forget her gloves she placed them in the overcoat pocket. On the way to the party Friend Husband put his hands in his pockets, discovered the gloves and immediately had a nervous chill. A few minutes later, at a dark place in the street, he threw the gloves away. After the party the wife asked her husband for her gloves. "I have not had your gloves," he replied. "Yes, you have! I put them in your pocket before we started." Gradually the husband saw a great light and the next day it cost him $1.75 for new gloves.
